Quaternion - mpweiher ===== numlock86 What's the deal with Wikipedia? Why are all these definitions and clarifications so complicated and overly detailed? "Quaternion" should have a much more straightforward and simple definition. It should clearly indicate what properties it has. Is it a mathematical object? A function? A type? Why not just spell it out like "A 4-D representation of rotation in 3-D space" and be done with it? I'd be really appreciative for getting rid of the annoying click-through from the "More" section. Sometimes I accidentally click on that and it takes me to some other page than the one I was actually trying to open. ~~~ scohesc i would agree. i hate that wikipedia has this mentality that nobody should read this wikipedia article but they should just google the concept. there's a whole world out there to know. wikipedia is great for getting a broad, yet deep understanding, but too often i feel like i am reading a disorganized blog. i know wikipedia has a lot of pressure to maintain a good quality website, but this really frustrates me. ~~~ dragonwriter > i know wikipedia has a lot of pressure to maintain a good quality website, None. Wikipedia is one of the (if not the) most cited sources on the web because of that quality, not because of pressure. ~~~ Diederich I think you are underplaying the situation. The people that pressure Wikimedia editors to change a definition aren't doing it because they have 'good' reasons, they are doing it because they have bad reasons. Possibly damaging the Wikipedia quality is not a good reason. ~~~ dragonwriter No, I have said that the pressure to change is caused by the quality, not the pressure to maintain the quality. The premise that a Wikipedia article of less quality means more pressure to change the article doesn't make any sense. ~~~ Diederich > No, I have said that the pressure to change is caused by the quality, not > the pressure to maintain the quality. I read what you said and understand it, but here's how it landed in your head.
